THE LONG BRIDGE.-The debate in the of $6,000 for repairs to the Long Bridge-Navy Yard, and Upper bridges, was a long one. Mr. Brown opposed any appropriation to break up the connection, and leave us to a maintains the other, under supervision of ferriage over the river; and that at a time, the State. The intelligence and public spirit lished in order to accommodate the whole will, we are sure, turn every opportunity to move towards the Valley about the end of

Mr. Mason said that Congress having mentioned, may be eminently successful. taken this bridge out of the hands of the original owners, who were citizens of Washington, and having come under at least an implied faith to keep up this communication, to destroy it at once without substituting something in its place, would be a want of faith on the part of the Government.

urging the right to cross this very bridge with railroad cars; I am opposed to it. I have no objection to see them cross a bridge above the point of navigation. That is only about a quarter or half a mile above Georgeover which a bridge can be constructed at comparatively little cost. No one now would struggle to keep the Government's hands on this bridge, if it was not his settled determination sooner or later to force a railroad passage across there at the expense of the Government, for there is no railroad company on God's earth that ever will construct a railroad bridge there. The estimates are, that a bridge can be built at the point above Georgetown, for less than one million dollars; and the estimate for a bridge at the site of the Long Bridge, is largely over three million dollars. I know what this will result in, in the end. I know why it is so pertinaciously insisted upon. It is, ultimately, to force a railroad bridge across at the site of the present Long Bridge. Apart from that, there is nothing in the question." Mr. Green looked upon this bridge as one of the greatest conveniences for Washington, in supplying its markets, &c. So far as I am concerned, I think it ought to be kept up. I have no prejudices to Georgetown. If they want a bridge there, it can be made; and it proportionate aid ought be given to Georgea convenience to the city of Washington; it is a convenience to the travelling public; it is a convenience to the citizens of Virginia; and it affords a good supply to the market of the city of Washington. I should and assist the Association in their noble work.

On the score of health, I think it a very late period to rise here and make objection that it, by its obstruction of the channel, has gererated a miasma detrimental to the Execurive mansion. I do not suppose that the insalubrity of the Executive mansion will cause anybedy to decline being President. [Laughter.] The incumbent can go to the Sordiers'

Mr. Fessenden said:—The debates that took place heretofore exhibited two points --In the first place that this was a bridge to be kept at the expense of Georgetown, and at the expense of the salubrity of the upper portion of this city, for the purpose of accommodating some farmers over in Virginia, They all appeared to be of opinion that the Saturday... 4 40 7 14 Last qr. 4 3 11 k. and for the great purpose of accommodating manner in which the Committee on the Fire 7 Menday... 4 45 7 15 First qr..18 3 4 M. a railroad, by having connections across the Treeday... 4 44 7 16 Full... 26 4 3 M. river. I wish simply to say it is no argument to my mind because the Government chose, upon the solicitation of others, to be generous enough some years ago, to make that a free bridge, and keep it obligation to keep it up eternally, whatever there may be a large attendance of both sales of 40,000 bush; Chicago Spring Slas4c; may be the evil consequences following Trustees and the friends of the institution."

Mr. Mason .- The Senator does not do justice to my view of that matter. I said the 15 cents will be made at the door, and a ticket public faith was pledged, as I considered, to provided for that object. Now, the honorable Senator says that I go to the extent of saying it is incumbent on the country to keep it up for ever. Certainly not; but I said they should keep it up until some other mode is provided of accommodating the interests that have grown up under the bridge. The tridge is now the property of the Government. Who has any right to interfere with it? Will it oity.
